MILLVILLE BOROUGH CASE APPEALED.

The writ was received on Monday, and puts a stop to all further proceedings until the argument of the case in the Supreme Court, which will be during the second week of April 1892. The election which was ordered by the Court for Tuesday, the 26th inst. was not held, owing to this appeal. The counsel for the appellants are R. R. Little, J. H. Maize and Geo. E. Elwell.

Over three hundred Normal students and their friends went on the excursion to Central on the B. & S. R. R. last Friday. They took along croquet sets and hammocks, and a great abundance of provisions. The day was a pleasant one, but a heavy shower of rain fell just after the excursionists had entered the cars to return home at 5 o'clock.

Invitations are out for the marriage of Miss Mary Sleeman, and Mr. Strickler of Harrisburg, on the 10th of June at the home of the bride on Rock street.

NORMAL SCHOOL NOTES.

On last Friday, May 22, there was inaugurated into the already busy life of our Normal School, a new and thoroughly practical feature, that of an annual excursion, to include all members of the school, their invited friends, and all alumni.

The direct objects of this new feature as conceived in the minds of the Faculty, are to give the great body of students a day of splendid enjoyment in the woods, and also to furnish the occasion for forming new acquaintances among the invited guests, and the renewing of friendships in the return of members of the alumni.

Well, if we were to expatiate on the success of this first Annual excursion, we would fail of words to tell of the jolly, good-hearted crowd that left "the hill," at 8.15 Friday morning for the D. L. & W. station and of their valiant exploits during the day.

The day broke cloudy and rather discouragingly, but even before starting, and as if to add more buoyancy to the already high spirits of the party, old Sol dispelled every cloud, and sunshine and gladness reigned supreme.

Through the kindness of Supt. Leader, of the B. & S. R. R., and his efficient corps of assistants, we were given every comfort and convenience within his power, and the general care and courteous politeness of every attachee of the train made all our party feel we were in good hands. Even the engineer seemed to realize what an unusual crowd he had aboard, and the way he managed his "iron horse" from throttle to air-brake, stopping now to give him drink and again to oil the bearings, made us all say: "We'll take him along next year." Conductor Scott, too, was full of kind words for our party. "Why, its fun to have such a crowd," said he, "no body is impudent and saucy as some parties are."

Central was the destination of our light-hearted three hundred, and as we followed the serpentine windings of our iron way, exclamations of surprise and admiration at the beautiful scenery were heard on all sides. Indeed, the morning was well in tune to inspire one with a love of nature, and the fine prospects along the famous B. & S. were greatly admired. Space forbids any detail of amusing incidents en route, but the improvised orchestra by Messrs Nyhart, Glick, Snyder, and Streeter we must refer to, not to make mention of that noble senior who attempted to classify a land terrapin as a botanical specimen of the family Hymenoptera.

Arrived at the grounds each vied witn the other in proposing or to set about doing those things that would insure pleasure to the greatest number. Lawn tennis courts were laid out, and the targets for archery located, croquet grounds selected, and other out-of-door games arranged for. The games were fairly started, however, when through the woods, there were heard ringing the stentorian tones of our chief—"dinner!" dinner!" and how that crowd responded! Through the kindly preparations of our steward, we were provided with an abundance of "substantials" for a day's outing, and right heartily did we show our appreciation of the good things.

The entire day was a most happy one. Every body was most highly pleased. The students say: "We want an excursion every year." Prof. Welsh says: "I never spent a day anywhere with a more orderly and polite body of young people." Conductor Scott says: "I want to haul that crowd next year," and every body demands an annual excursion.

Mr. John M. Sauder, of Springfield, Ill., has patented an improved device for fastening desk tops and the backs and seat boards of school desks upon the supporting standards of the seat and desk. By means of this device the wooden desk top, the back, and the seat boards are interlocked with the metal standards or frames, securing an elastic connection between the wooden and metal parts of the desk, so that the expansion and contraction of the metal or the swelling and shrinking of the wood will be compensated for, so that cramping strains which would split the material or tend to loosen the frame will be avoided.—Scientific American.

Thomas Arndt who lives along the D. L. & W. railroad opposite the School Furnishing Company's Works met with a serious accident Monday afternoon about five o'clock. He had been to the Farmer's Produce Exchange and purchased some molasses. The local freight of the D. L. & W. was switching some cars at the School Furnishing Company's Works. When Mr. Arndt, approached near his home the local freight was making a flying switch; he stepped off the main track to get out of the way of the engine, and got on the switch immediately in front of the flying car. He was knocked down and the car passed over him. His one leg was considerably crushed the bones being broken, and flesh lacerated—he was also badly bruised about the head. He crawled off the track and rolled in the gutter where he was found and carried to his home. Doctors Arment and Brown were called in who bandaged the broken limb. At eight o'clock Dr. Gardner was sent for, and after a careful examination, decided the leg must be removed at the knee. The operation was preformed on Tuesday morning, Drs. McReynolds and Reber assisting Dr. Gardner, and the patient is doing as well as can be expected.

THE DRAFT IN BALDINSVILLE.

IF I'M drafted I shall resign.

Deeply grateful for the onexpected honor thus conferred upon me I shall feel compeld to resign the position in favor of sum more worthy person. Modesty is what ails me.

I meanter-say, I shall hav to resign if I'm drafted everywheres I've bin inrold. I must now, furrinstuns, be inrold in upards of 200 different towns. If I'd kept on travelin' I should hav eventooaly becum a Brigade, in which case I could have held a meetin' and elected myself Brigadeer-ginral quite unanimiss. I hain't no idea there was so many of me before. But, serisly, I concluded to stop exhibitin', and made tracks for Baldinsville.

My only daughter threw herself onto my boosum, and said, "It is me fayther! I thank the Gods!"

She reads the Ledger.

"Tip us yer bunch of fives, old faker!" said ARTEMUS, JR. He reads the Clipper.

My wife was to the sowin' circle. I knew she and the wimin folks was havin' a pleasant time slanderin' the females of the other sowin' circle (which likewise met that arternoon, and was doubtless enjoyin' theirselves ekally well in slanderin' the fust named circle), and I didn't send for her. I allus like to see people enjoy theirselves.

My son ORGUSTUS was playin' onto a floot.

ORGUSTUS is a ethereal cuss. The twins was bildin' cob-houses in a corner of the kitchen.

It'll cost some postage stamps to raise this fam'ly, and yet 't 'nd go hard with the old man to lose any lamb of the flock.

An old bachelor is a poor critter. He may have hearn the skylark or (what's nearly the same thing) Miss KELLOGG and CARLOTTY PATTI sing; he may have hearn OLE BULL fiddle, and all the DODWORTHS toot, an' yet he don't know nothin' about music—the real, ginuine thing—the music of the laughter of happy, well fed children! And you may ax the father of such children home to dinner, feelin' werry sure there'll be no spoons missin' when he goes away. Sich fathers never drop tin five-cent pieces into the contribution box, nor palm shoe pegs off onto blind hosses for oats, nor skedaddle to British sile when their country is in danger—nor do anything which is really mean. I don't mean to intimate that the old bachelor is up to little games of this sort—not at all—but I repeat, he's a poor critter. He don't live here—only stays. He ought to 'pologize, on behalf of his parients, for bein' here at all. The happy marrid man dies in good stile at home, surrounded by his weeping wife and children. The old bachelor don't die at all—he sort of rots away, like a pollywog's tail.

My townsmen were sort o' demoralized. There was a evident desine to evade the Draft, as I obsarved with sorrer, and patritism was below Par—and Mar, too. [A jew desprit.] I hadn't no sooner sot down on the piazzy of the tavrun than I saw sixteen solitary hossmen, ridin' four abreast, wending their way up the street.

"What's them? Is it cavilry?"

"That," said the landlord, "is the stage. Sixteen able-bodied citizens has lately bo't the stage line 'tween here and Scotsburg. That's them. They're Stage-drivers. Stage-drivers is exempt!"

I saw that each stage-driver carried a letter in his left hand.

"The mail is heavy today," said the landlord. "Gin'rally they don't have more'n half a dozen letters 'tween 'em. Today they've got one apiece! Bile my lights and liver!"

"And the passengers?"

"There ain't any, skacely now-days," said the landlord, "and what few there is very much prefer to walk, the roads is so rough."

"And how ist with you?" I inquired of the editor of the Bugle-Horn of Liberty, who sot near me.

"I can't go," he sed, shakin' his head in a wise way. "Ordinarily I should delight to wade in gore, but my bleedin' country bids me stay at home. It is imperatively necessary that I remain here for the purpose of announcin' from week to week that our Gov'ment is about to take vigorous measures to put down the rebellion!"

I strolled into the village oyster saloon, where I found Dr. Schwazey, a leadin' citizen, in a state of mind which showed that he'd bin histin' in more'n his share of pizen.

"Hello, old Beeswax," he bellered; 'how's yer grandmams? When you goin' to feed your stuffed animils?"

"What's the matter with the eminent physician?" I pleasantly inquired.

"This," he said, "this is what's the matter. I'm a habitooal drunkard! I'm exempt!"

"Jes' so."

"Do you see them beans, old man?" and he pinted to a plate before him. "Do you see 'em?"

"I do. They are a cheerful fruit when used tempritly."

"Well," said he, "I hain't eat anything since last week. I eat beans now because I eat beans then. I never mix my vittles!"

"It's quite proper you should eat a little suthin' once in a while," I said. "It's a good idee to occasionally instruct the stummick that it mustn't depend exclooSively on licker for its sustainance."

"A blessin'," he cried; "a blessin' onto the hed of the man what inwented beans. A blessin' onto his hed!"

"Which his name is GILSON! He's a first family of Bostin," said I.

This is a specimen of how things was goin' in my place of residence.

A few were true blue. The schoolmaster was among 'em. He greeted me warmly. He said I was welkim to those shores. He said I had a massiv mind. It was gratifyin', he said, to see that great intelleck stalkin' in their midst onct more. I have before had occasion to notice this schoolmaster. He is evidently a young man of far more than ord'nary talents.

The schoolmaster proposed we should git up a mass meetin'. The meetin' was largely attended. We held it in the open air round a roarin' bonfire.

The schoolmaster was the first orator. He's pretty good on the speak. He also writes well, his composition bein' seldom marred by ingrammaticisms. He said this inactivity surprised him. "What do you expect will come of this kind of doin's? Nihil fit"——

"Hooray for Nihil!" I interrupted. "Fellow-citizens, let's giv three cheers for Nihil, the man who fit!"

The schoolmaster turned a little red, but repeated—"Nihil fit."

"Exactly," I said. "Nihil fit. He wasn't a strategy feller."

"Our venerable friend," said the schoolmaster, smiling pleasantly, "isn't posted in Virgil."

"No, I don't know him. But if he's a able-bodied man he must stand his little draft."

The schoolmaster wound up in eloquent style, and the subscriber took the stand.

I said the crisis had not only cum itself, but it had brought all its relations. It has cum, I said, with a evident intention of makin' us a good long visit. It's goin' to take off its things and stop with us. My wife says so too. This is a good war. For those who like this war, it's just such a kind of war as they like. I'll bet ye. My wife says so too. If the Federal army succeeds in takin' Washington, and they seem to be advancin' that way pretty often, I shall say it is strategy, and Washington will be safe. And that noble banner, as it were—that banner, as it were—will be a emblem, or rather, I should say, that noble banner—as it were. My wife says so too. [I got a little mixed up here, but they didn't notice it. Keep mum.] Feller citizens, it will be a proud day for this Republic when Washington is safe. My wife says so too.

The editor of the Bugle-Horn of Liberty here arose and said: "I do not wish to interrupt the gentleman, but a important despatch has just bin received at the telegraph office here. I will read it. It is as follows: Gov'ment is about to take vigorous measures to put down the rebellion! [Loud applause.]

That, said I, is cheering. That's soothing. And Washington will be safe. [Sensation.] Philadelphia is safe. Gen. PATTERSON'S in Philadelphia. But my heart bleeds partic'ly for Washington. My wife says so too.

There's money enough. No trouble about money. They've got a lot of first-class bank-note engravers at Washington (which place, I regret to say, is by no means safe) who turn out two or three cords of money a day—good money, too. Goes well. These bank-note engravers made good wages. I expect they lay up property. They are full of Union sentiment. There is considerable Union sentiment in Virginny, more especially among the honest farmers of the Shenandoah valley. My wife says so too.

Then it isn't money we want. But we do want men, and we must have them. We must carry a whirlwind of fire among the foe. We must crush the ungrateful rebels who are poundin' the Goddess of Liberty over the head with slung-shots, and stabbin' her with stolen knives! We must lick 'em quick. We must introduce a large number of first-class funerals among the people of the South. Betsy says so too.

This war hain't been too well managed. We all know that. What then? We are all in the same boat—if the boat goes down, we go down with her. Hence we must all fight. It ain't no use to talk now about who caused the war. That's played out. The war is upon us—upon us all—and we must all fight. We can't "reason" the matter with the foe. When, in the broad glare of the noonday sun, a speckled jackass boldly and maliciously kicks over a peanut-stand do we "reason" with him? I guess not. And why "reason" with those other Southern people who are trying to kick over the Republic? Betsy, my wife, says so too.

The meeting broke up with enthusiasm.

We shant draft in Baldinswille if we can help it.

An Indian Whom the Prince Befriended.

"Orouligatcklia, M. D., Toronto," was written on the register at the Grand Pacific hotel by a good looking, broad shouldered six footer. The guest is an Indian who in his youth was chief of a tribe of Mohawks. The Prince of Wales when he visited Canada was favorably impressed with the dusky young chief, and after some little urging the latter consented to go England to be educated at the expense of his royal highness. He graduated at Oxford and subsequently took a medical degree in a school in London. Since that time he has practiced in Toronto. He is polished and refined in his manners.—Chicago Tribune.

Agriculture and the Fair.

SOME OF THE INTERESTING PLANS BEING DEVELOPED FOR 1893.

The history of no previous Exposition attests at so early a date such general interest among all classes of people as to the general character, extent, the benefit that it is believed will follow, and the possibilities for good awaiting agriculturists from the exhibit in the Agricultural Department of the Exposition, as at the present time.

A great advancement has been made since the Philadelphia Centennial Exposition in all branches of farm work. Since that time the Department of Agriculture has been given a position in the Cabinet; has attained a firm foothold in the estimation of the people, and has not only become one of the most prominent of the governmental Departments, but has been productive of most beneficial results to the commerce of our country, and every one engaged in farm-work.

Another advance in agricultural work is the Experiment Stations, that are now connected with the Agricultural Colleges of our Country, supported by the Government, with trained scientists and educators at their head, their work reaching out into all the fields of scientific research, seeking to assist in a practical way those engaged in farm-work and to advance the standard of excellence in this great industry to a foremost place in the estimation of mankind.

In a letter referring to Agriculture and the Exposition, Chief, W. T. Buchanan says:

"The subject of irrigation and its possibilities has, within a few years, become one of intense interest, and it is expected at the coming Exposition to present the subject in such a way that it will attract very great attention, and within the next ten years be the means of reclaiming vast regions supposed heretofore to have no value for farming purposes.

"The great advance made in the study of dairying and the successful breeding of live stock has been one of the marvels of the past decade, and with the impetus that will be given these industries by the proposed Dairy School and the immense Live Stock exhibit at the Exposition, the good result likely to follow cannot be estimated.

"The interest throughout the country in beautifying our road-ways by tree planting, the setting aside by several of our state leislatures of one day in the year to be devoted to the purpose, known as Arbor Day, and the encouragement given this excellent practice in our common schools; the popularity of, and interest taken in Farmers' Institutes throughout the country by the Farming community, are all indicative of the rapid advancement that has been made in agricultural pursuits since the Philadelphia Central Exposition.

"The coming Exposition will be, as it were, the focusing point at which all the best results, the thought, intelligence, and energy of those interested in the great problems connected with the agricultural life will be centered. As an instance, the question of the production of sugar from sorghum and the sugar beet is one that is attracting great interest in many sections of the country, notably in the west. The Experiment Stations in connection with the Agricultural Department at Washington are devoting time and attention to this work, and the results that will be shown in '93 at the exposition, as what can be done with an acre of ground devoted to producing sugar from these products, will be a source of wonder and amazement to the visitor. It will attract attention to the localities adapted to this industry, and will be the means of building factories and other industries connected with the production of sugar in this manner.

"The South, until recently supposed to be devoted entirely to the production of certain crops, will be represented at the Exposition by so great a variety of products that one will cease to wonder at the great material advancement made by that part of our agricultural area.

"One purpose of the Exposition of 1893 is to show to the assembled world such a magnificent result of the energy, advancement and culture of our agricultural population, such an overwhelming illustration of the unending variety, and the untold wealth of our natural resources that it will be one of the most lasting monuments to the success of the Exposition.

"For the first time in the history of Expositions, a magnificent building is to be devoted entirely to the use of agricultural organizations, with a splendid auditorium or lecture-room in which to meet and deliberate, where all of the great topics connected with the work engaged in by agriculturists can be discussed, and from which will go out results that will be far-reaching, and of inestimable value and benefit to our country.

Judge—"You are an incorrigible young scoundrel? You stole from your parents and then left a good home. Why did you do that?" Penitent—"Your honor, it was impossible for me to take it with me."—New York Herald.

New Fish Law.

Following is the new fish law, relating to bass, pike and pickerel, as it passed both houses of the Legislature: "No person shall catch or kill, in any of the rivers, waters or streams of this Commonwealth, any black bass or wall-eyed pike under six inches in length, or any rock bass under five inches in length under a penalty of ten dollars for every fish so caught. But should any such fish be taken of less size than the above, or should any wall eyed pike or rock bass of any size be taken from the waters in which they have been introduced within two years from the passage of this act, it shall be the duty of any one taking or capturing the same to return the fish immediately to water from whence taken, and no person shall by any means or device whatever catch or kill in any of the waters of this State any pike or pickerel between the first day of February and the first day of June in any year. Any violation of this section shall subject the offender to a penalty of ten dollars for each and every fish so caught."

A Ninety-Year-Old Son.

A man 90 years old going home to visit his mother and father, was at the Union Depot last night. If his story is true, Julius Schnieder, of Washington, Pa., has a family whose length of life will go on the records. He is a German, and went to New York, thence to sail for the Fatherland. He says his father and mother live in Leipsig, and are 114 and 112 years old, respectively. He had his ticket for New York, and appeared plentifully supplied with money. Notwithstanding his years, Mr. Schnieder was far from showing the infirmities of age. His hair was snow white, but a bloom still freshened his cheek, showing his rare vitality. He has been in the tannery business in Washington county for many years. If he arrives safely at his birthplace he will remain there to end his days.—Pittsburg Times.

Mehoopany people are considerably excited over the prospects of a monstrous lumbering and tannery scheme. Davadge and Co., of Berkshire, N. Y., representing a great English syndicate, have secured an option on the Rickets tract, comprising about 16,000 acres of timberland lying along the Mehoopany creek, and were at Mehoopany Saturday looking the ground over with a view of building a huge tannery at that place, provided they purchase the tract. They will also build a standard guage railroad back to Forkston, by way of Jenningsville, by which lumber and bark will be brought down to the Lehigh Valley Road. This will necessitate a bridge across the river, which it is proposed to build as a combination railroad and wagon bridge. The tannery will probably be located on the east side of the river, near the depot. Jennings Bros., of Lopez, will doubtless cut the timber, and will erect a huge mill for that purpose back in the woods. The plan, if it materializes, will be a big boom for the lumbering interests of Wyoming county.

A Burglar Captured

This morning about two o'clock, John Wood, the well-known plumber who resides on Main Street, was awakened by hearing glass break. On getting out of bed he received a blow on the head. He immediately grappled with the burglar, and after a terrible struggle succeeded in holding him until his wife obtained help. On being searched at the station, Mr. Wood's watch and wallet was found on his person. He gave the name as Robert Terry. The broken glass proved to be a bottle of Sulphur Bitters which had almost cured Mrs. Wood of rheumatism. —Exchange. 5-29-2t.

The Much-Traveled Irishman

'Tis twelve months since I came to America
The fortune of me uncle to enjoy.
Bless his name! Shure he left me the whole av it,
And in his will he said, "Now Pat, me boy,
Ye's ought to spind a solid year in thravelin,
The great soights av this counthry for to see."
And sure me uncle didn't need to urge me much
For thravelin is a trick that just suits me.

So I've thraveled over all this mighty nation
From north to south and from the east to west;
I've thraveled both on land and on the wather,
But shure the railroad thravelin suittes me best.
And of all the fine railroads in America,
And meself shure has thraveled on them all.
The one that heads the list for solid comfort
Is the Chicago, Milwaukee, and St. Paul.

Both for attin and for dhrinkin and for shlapin,
Their equipment is most costly and complate.
There is splendor enough for old King Solomon.
And dainties for his thousand wives to ate.
O! I've thraveled all up and down America,
The railroads and the shteamboats tried them all,
But there's nothing can compare in solid comfort
Wid the Chicago, Milwaukee, and St. Paul.

The New Moon.

"How is it your Tommy is so small for his age, Mrs. Briggs?" "O, the little dear always was a shrinking child," exclaimed his mother.

Bennie: "Mamma, do people really buy babies?" Mamma: "Of course, child; of course. Run out now and play." Bennie, in a brown study: "Then why is it, mamma, that poor people buy more of 'em than anybody else?"

Aunt: "Didn't you get another thrashing in school to-day?" Johnny: "Yes, indeed I did; but it didn't hurt a bit." Aunt: "Did you cry?" Johnny "Yes, I bellered like everything; but I only did it to humor the teacher."

A little girl, who had mastered her catechism confessed herself disappointed, "because," she said, "though I obey the fifth commandment and honor my papa and mamma, yet my days are not a bit longer in the land, because I am put to bed at seven o'clock."

Willie, regretfully: "I'd like just awfully to kiss you, Gracie, but I s'pect it wouldn't do. You know your mamma said you mustn't never kiss the boys." Gracie: "Yes, that's what she said. That is, it's about what she said. I 'member just as well. She says to me, she says: "Gracie, don't you ever let me see you kissin' the boys.' Mamma, she's gone over to Mrs. Bilby's."

There is a smart little boy of our acquaintance whose memory is a good deal like his trousers pocket,—a receptacle for all sorts of odds and ends, which are retained with no little pertinacity, but in more or less picturesque disorder. Things pop up now and then in an odd way. The other night this little boy undertook to say his prayers before going to bed. He began all right,—

Now I lay me down to sleep,
I pray the Lord my soul to keep;
If I should—

Here he "got stuck" for a moment, and seemed to be groping around for the remainder of the lines. And then all at once, he steamed ahead—

If I should chance to fall below
Demosthenes or Cicero,
I pray the Lord my soul to take.

A mother on Delaware Avenue was giving her son, a boy of seven years, some Bible instruction. She was telling him the story of Adam's fall. Having narrated the tale of the apple and what mischief it did, the mother asked. "Now don't you think Adam did very wrong to eat the apple?" The little fellow thought a moment and then answered, "Mamma, would it, have been polite to refuse the apple when the lady offered it to him?"

"What do you want, boy?" "Ma sent me after a tourist's guide." "Sure your mother sent you?" "O yes, and she wants to know the name of the best hotel at Long Branch, and the price per day." "Going to the seashore?" "No, sir. We're going out to spend two weeks in the Country at my Uncle William's, but ma wants to post up on Long Branch and be able to tell everybody what hotel we stopped at and how expensive it was."

What it Costs.

Must be carefully considered by the great majority of people, in buying even necessities of life. Hood's Sarsaparilla commends itself with special force to the great middle classes, because it combines positive economy with great medicinal power. It is the only medicine of which can truly be said "100 Doses One Dollar," and a bottle taken according to directions will average to last a month.

LIKE A MILLION.—Jack, I tell you what, Maude makes quite a figure in society.

Scrofula and Salt Rheum

The heritage of which every human being is almost as certain as he is of air, sunlight and breath, is Scrofula Humor. Far away in the realms of history we catch glimpses of what a curse upon the people this all-prevalent contamination made itself. Poor diet and insufficient food, ill ventilation, filth and dampness, all assist the slumbering germs of Scrofula to overpower the vitality of the body and run riot in the system. The blood in its process of renewing the waste cannot expel any inherited taint of weakness or impurity. It can only be removed by the action of some purifying medicinal agency, which assisted by nutritious food, well digested and assimilated into blood, gradually insures the possession of sound health. Such a renovating remedy has Brown's Sarsaparilla proved itself to be, whether this taint has given rise to Scrofula, Salt Rheum Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Liver Complaints, or Kidney Diseases, which are the most frequent manifestations of its presence, all have readily yielded to the clean and purifying action of Brown's Sarsaparilla.

Cured by the Use of

A VERY BAD CASE

of Scrofula, cured by Brown's Sarsaparilla, has excited the people living in and around the town of Lee, Me. Mr. Averill writes us as follows: "My son has now taken fourteen bottles of Brown's Sarsaparilla, and I am sure it has completed a cure. His case was the worst I ever saw. His face was covered with what seemed to be scales or scabs, and the itching was so intolerable that he tossed about in agony through many a sleepless night. He commenced some weeks ago to use Brown's Sarsaparilla in connection with the salve you sent to allay the irritation, and now he is so far recovered that we consider his complete cure as certain." Mr. J. W. Burke of Lee, chairman of Penobscot Co. Commissioners, says: "It is wonderful what Brown's Sarsaparilla has done for young Averill." In this case Brown's Sarsaparilla threw open the bowels and pores of the skin, at the same time entering the blood, beginning a vigorous warfare on the impure matter found there, and which was a constant source of supply for the scrofulous humor on the outside. In time this was expelled from the system, and only pure matter entered the blood.

SALT RHEUM.

On Davis Street, in Bangor, resides Mrs. Edwin Wiley, whose daughter was badly afflicted with Salt Rheum. At times her face and hands would be covered with blotches. So intense was the itching sensation that applications of salt were made to destroy it. For a long time no relief could be obtained. One day some one suggested Brown's Sarsaparilla, and a bottle was purchased. Later Mrs. Wiley brought her daughter to the establishment of Mr. Asa Warren where Brown's Sarsaparilla is made. The face that a short time previous was covered with blotches, burning and itching, presented as fair and smooth an appearance as that of any young lady. LESS THAN ONE BOTTLE WAS USED.

HARRISBURG, May, 27, 1891.

The days of session of the Legislature of 1891, are fast nearing their end. Within the next thirty-six hours we can say Vale et vale. And yet, judging from the manner of transacting business in the Senate and House last night, a stranger would have supposed the session was only beginning instead of ending. Gabble has been the prime move, although work was of primary importance. I need not say to you again that I have never known a legislative body since the adoption of the constitution of 1837 which has done so litt e. I am neither hide-bound nor partisan in my feelings or utterances when the remark is made that this of all has proved the least consequential, the least important of all Legislatures which have ever assembled. It has been throughout in the control of a ring of bosses, which must bring the greatest of discredit upon the men who have been sent here to make laws for the great Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

Last night, nearly reaching away into the wee small hours of the morning, but little of benefit or consequence to the tax-payers of Pennsylvania was done. This sort of legislature may be all right, but I doubt whether the people of Pennsylvania will approve of it when they come to cast their ballots next November. Mind you, I am not saying there are not good, honest, conscientious Republicans in the Legislature, but I do say that "bosses"have ruled them from beginning to end.

Last night the Senate devoted to the final passage of the Appropriation bills. Cowardly like these bills have been passed, and then the attempt is made to shift the responsibility upon the shoulders of the Governor. He is equal to the requirements of the occasion, and more than ne pet scheme to filch money from e State Treasury will meet with his sapproval. Governor Pattison will o his duty, and, whether it meets the commendation of friend or foe, his veto will be exercised in the interest of the constitution and thereby of the people.

The Baker Ballot Reform bill passed the Senate last night. It is emasculated of many of its best features, and the end is that its author will be like Japhet, "in search of a father." My own impression is that Mr. Baker was never honest or sincere in his advocacy of the bill of which he is supposed to be the author. Should it ever receive the signature of the Governor, it will never amount to shucks. It was never intended to be for the best interests of the people, and they will find that out before many suns rise and set, many moons wax and wane, many stars twinkle and disappear.

There was a pitiable spectacle in the House last night. Mr. Taggart, of Montgomery, the author of the Taggart or Grangers' bill for equal taxation, was the first to move for the final passage of the Boyer bill. Oh. how he was twitted by Messrs Wherry, Skinner and others; but he arose in his seat, flushed in the face, and advocated the passage of the Boyer bill. There are many "small potatoes" in the Sen te and House, but Taggart by his conduct and course has made himself the smallest of small potatoes in a small hill. He tried to pose in the beginning of the session as an opponent to the re-election of Senator Cameron, even went so far as to announce himself as a candidate for United States Senator, but the little boom he started soon petered out, and throughout the session he has been of no consequence whatever. He has been for Taggart first, last and all the time, and even should he become Chief of the Agricultural Department, which is proposed to be started, he will be the same small (although great in avordupois) Taggart!

The terrible fall of Bardsley the City Treasurer of Philadelphia, has caused much surprise. At the State Capitol he was always considered to have been an honest man, although a gabbler from way back. His peculations now amount, it is said, to $3,000,000. I was talking with a prominent Republican Senator on Monday night, and he expressed his fears for Republican success in Pennsylvania next fall, more especially in Philadelphia. He was wont to swear by John Bardsley, but he says his and the conduct of his masters will make matters very uncertain for Republican success next fall. The defalcations of Bardsley and his pals may, after all, prove a great boom to the people of this tax-ridden, boss-ridden grand old Commonwealth, So mote it be.

Before another issue of the COLUMBIAN the Legislature of Pennsylvania for 1891 will be among the things that were. May we never look upon its like again.

COLUMBIA.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

From our Regular Correspondent.

WASHINGTON, D. C. May 25, 1891.

Mr. Harrison is really becoming alarmed on account of the attitude Mr. Blaine has assumed towards him. It isn't the absurd fiction concerning Mr. Blaine's failing mental powers that is worrying Mr. H. for he has had ocular demonstration within the last four days that there is not the slightest disarrangement of his premier's ability to use plain and terse English, but it is the idea that Mr. Blaine does not propose to give him the benefit of his advice in shaping things for his nomination, and that under the plea of ill health Mr. Blaine may go to Maine and leave him for an indefinite period to wrestle alone with the important international questions that are now so numerous in the State department that they almost bump their heads together.

If the republican District Attorney is not made to neglect his duty by the powers above him young Mr. Raum, the son of the borrowing Commissioner of Pensions, may find himself the inmate of a prison cell as the result of his energy in selling appointments and promotions in the Pension office. The Civil Service Commission, which was duped by this young office-broker, is determined, that is to say, "Teddy" Roosevelt, who is in reality the commission, is determined that Raum and his confederates shall be prosecuted, and if he can possibly accomplish it, punished. The evidence, which Roosevelt says makes a plain case, was laid before Mr. Harrison; he referred it to the Attorney General, after holding a long consultation with him, and doubtless mapping out precisely how much in earnest the prosecution is to be on the part of the Government

Meanwhile old man Raum holds the fort in the crookedest bureau of the Government although public opinion may in the end compel Mr. Harrison to ask for his resignation—he'll never get it unless he does ask for it.

The old fake that Mr. Harrison had come to the conclusion that it would be only right and decent to give the democrats three out of the nine U. S. Circuit Court judges has again been revived possibly by the visit to the White House of a delegation of Virginians led by Senator Barbour, in the interest of a democrartc candidate for one of the appointments. When he appoints even one democrat then I shall believe that he intends recognizing the party. Outside signs—the presence of some of the known republican candidates—point to the early appointment of the new judges, but it is impossible to get a definite official statement, consequently rumors are numerous. One will tell you that in order to take no chances Mr. Harrison has decided to defer making the appointments until after Congress meets, another that he has them all ready to announce.

There is an unconfirmed rumor that Mr. J. W. Foster, who recently returned from Spain whither he went as Mr. Blaine's special and confidential agent, is to take charge of diplomatic affairs until Mr. Blaine returns to duty. There are numerous reasons which make it probable that this rumor will turn out to be a fact.

It is a noticeable fact that every republican of any prominence who comes to town these days gets himself interviewed for the the purpose of setting a dish of "taffy" before the gentleman who occupies the White House; they all want something. There have been a half dozen of these interviews within a week that about the only difference in was the change of the name of the talker. These people all talk as though they expected Texas to cast her electoral vote for Harrison because her citizens courteously received the President of the United States.

"Mark my words", said a disgusted republican: "if the democrats of the next House will put a smart investigating committee to work on this Behring Sea business one of the biggest scandals of the age will be uncovered. The facts are in existance and can be got at if they will go about it in the right way, and, like the trail of the notorious whiskey ring, it will lead pretty close to the Executive Mansion" In vain I tried to persuade the gentleman to say more on the subject.

It is announced with a great flourish of trumpets as though it were a financial triumph, that Secretary Foster now sees his way clear to paying the $26,000,000 of pension money that falls due in the first week in June.

Mr. Steve Elkins was at the White House a dav or two ago. He says he has no personal interest in the Behring Sea sealing contract, but that his friend Mill, father-in-law of Whitelaw Reid, requested him to look out for his interests while he was abroad. Of course no one would think for a moment of doubting any statement Mr. Elkins might make.

If you decide, from what you have heard or read, that you will take Hood's Sarsaparilla, do not be induced to buy any substitute instead.

Philadelphia's Two Treasurers

THE GOVERNOR APPOINTS ONE. COMMISSIONERS ELECT A SECOND.

PHILADELPHIA, May 26.—The county commissioners, this morning, by a vote of two to one, elected Richard G. Oellers city treasurer, to fill the vacancy that will shortly occur in that office. Messrs. Bartley and Stulb, Republicans, voted for Mr. Oellers, and Mr Sensenderfer, Democrat, cast his ballot for William Redwood Wright, the governor's appointee.

The meeting of the commissioners took place in their office in city hall at 10.30 a. m. The discussion was brief and to the point, and the work for which they convened together was quickly accomplished. Messrs. Bartley and Stulb nominated Mr Oellers and voted for him. Mr. Sensenderfer named Clement R. Wainwright, Henry D. Welsh and William Redwood Wright, and when it came to a ballot he voted for Mr. Wright. Immediately after voting Mr. Stulb left the hall for a trip out of town, and Mr. Bartley went to the Record office to inform Mr. Oellers of his election.

Referring to the position taken by the commissioners, Mr. Sensenderfer says: "From all the information we have been able to get on the subject we understand that we have the right to elect. We have had nothing from Mr. Warwick yet—nothing official; it is simply a matter of opinion. The people whom we have consulted, and they include lawyers of admitted ability, say if the governor has not the right to name the successor we have. The weight of opinions already received is in our favor. We simply acted on that. If we had not the right no harm can be done."

Both branches of the city council will meet in joint convention to-morrow and proceed to elect a successor to Mr. Bardsley. City Solicitor Warwick has prepared an elaborate opinion sustaining the right of councils to fill the vacancy, and after the presentation of Mr. Warwick's opinion the election will be held.

Although it is not improbable that the councils will repudiate the election to-day of Mr. Oellers by the city commissioners and elect another man, still from present indications that gentleman will be their choice for the office.

There seems to be a tacit understanding that the state sena e will do nothing toward seating the nominee of Governor Pattison. This is in accord with declarations by Senator George Handy Smith, Porter, J. P. S. Gobin, and others, that the right to fill the vacancy resides under the law with the county commissioners.

A cur ous legal question in refer ence to the various appointing powers came out to-day. The county commissioners can, under the authority they claim, not only appoint but issue the necessary commission and approve the sureties. In case councils elect, it is said they cannot issue the commission, which must be done by the governor, and under the circumstances, the latter would of course refuse to do that until instructed to do so by the court. In case of the governor's appointment he can also issue the commission and the only doubtful question is as to the approval of the sureties.

Eva Ray Hamilton, it is announced, will go upon the stage this fall. Since she failed in establishing herself as the legal widow of Mr. Ray Hamilton before the Surrogate's court in New York, she has determined to seek revenge by going upon the stage in a drama of her own debased life, entitled "The Hammertons." It is supposed to be a scheme to bring the Hamiltons to terms, and thus force them to buy her off.

A team belonging to Gomer Thomas ran away on Railroad street last Saturday, and threw the driver, Richard Metherell, out of the wagon cutting a gash on his head.

The importance of purifying the blood cannot be overestimated, for without pure blood you cannot enjoy good health.

At this season nearly every one needs a good medicine to purify, vitalize, and enrich the blood, and we ask you to try Hood's Peculiar Sarsaparilla. It strengthens and builds up the system, creates an appetite, and tones the digestion, while it eradicates disease. The peculiar combination, proportion, and preparation of the vegetable remedies used give to Hood's Sarsaparilla peculiar curative powers. No other medicine has such a record of wonderful cures. Two Beautiful Young Girls.

WHO WILL CREATE A FURORE IN NEWPORT THIS SUMMER.

Newport is to have a sensation this summer.

It is authentically stated that the beautiful and celebrated daughters of Lord Dufferin, Beatrice and Adelaide, are to grace this famous resort with their presence this coming season.

It will be remembered that Beatrice,s beautiful dark eyes have played havoc lately with the heart of Albert, the eldest son of the Prince of Wales. What it will amount to is as yet a matter of conjecture in England. The young ladies are acknowledged to be the most beautiful in all Europe, and there will be not a little excitement in the hearts of our American belles over their coming. They are exquisite dressers, and their costumes will be marvels of curiosity. Unlike most ladies, they know exactly what is suited to them. Some time ago they sent for the chief designer of the Paris house of THE NEW YORK AND PARIS YOUNG LADIES' FASHION BAZAR, and selected forty costumes each, the cost of which will amount to thousands of pounds.

Through the courtesy of these young ladies we have been permitted to copy for THE NEW YORK AND PARIS YOUNG LADIES' FASHION BAZAR two of their most exquisite costumes, which appear as figures 3 and 4 on the colored plates of the June number of this magazine, just out, and for which the publisher has issued, in the name of the American ladies, a card of thanks. It is rumored that the prince may follow the young ladies to Newport this summer. THE NEW YORK AND PARIS YOUNG LADIES' FASHION BAZAR has the exclusive right to publish each month at least one or more of the costumes in which the ladies Beatrice and Adelaide will appear.

Ostentation at Funerals.

It is a sad commentary on a Christian community, which takes that distinctive title from a religion whose founder is called the Consoler, because His word plucks the sting from death, that it surrounds death with every circumstance of woe and gloom. The distinctive ministry of the faith seems to fail at the very point to which it is especially addressed. The natural Christian tone at the burial of the dead would seem to be the cheer that springs from the thought of immortality—a sublime hope, a tender resignation. The Christian thought in that hour should instinctively dwell upon the soul, not upon the body, and the simplest and most unostentatious rite of burial would seem to be the most truly Christian. But the ostentation of Christian funerals has become so great that burial reform associations are formed, both in this country and in England, to relieve the poor of the painful and needless cost which, from mistaken respect for the dead, they will not spare so long as ostentation is the custom.—GEORGE WILLIAM CURTIS, in the Editor's Easy Chair, in Harper's Magazine for June.

Pure Rye Whiskey.

One year ago we had 5000 gallons of Old Rye Whiskey in Bond, which was considered a large stock to carry and sufficient for the trade. The demand, however, for our whiskey became such, that we were compelled to increase the capacity of our distillery, in order to give the whiskey some age before placing it on the market.

We are now making over a barrel a day; having a daily capacity of over 50 gals. and carrying a stock of 11,000 gals. in Bond. We hope to give our patrons the benefit of the age and will sell no whiskey under six months, and from that up to three years. No second hand barrels are used at our Distillery; all our whiskey is bonded in new, clean, charred, barrels, and for purity and quality we defy competition.

We have never distilled a bushel of corn, and we do hereby guarantee ALL our whiskey to be absolutely Pure Rye and doubled on a copper lined still and to any person who will find any drugs or corn in our whiskey as it leaves our Distilllery or Salesroom, we will forfeit $500.00.

It has been decided by the Kitchen M. E. Church, Wellversville to meet on June 4th to work and put the Kitchen Cemetery in good order. All who are interested in the cemetery are requested to come and help.

President Marsh of the broken Keystone Bank of Philadelphia, has disappeared, and his bail have offered a reward for his capture. City Treasurer Bardsley has resigned, and made an assignment. Just now the Quaker City appears to be having a parrot of a time of it financially.

A level headed newspaper man has described the "pass" and its emoluments as follows: One of the beauties and charms of an editor's life is in his deadheading on all occasions. No one who has ever feasted on the sweets of that bliss can begin to take in the glory of its happiness. He does $100 worth of advertising for a railroad, gets a "pass" for a year, rides $25 worth and then is looked upon as a deadhead or a half-blown deadbeat. He also "puffs" a troupe $10 worth and gets fifty cents in complimentaries, and is thus passed in "free." If the hall is crowded he is begrudged the room he occupies, for if his complimentaries were paying tickets the troupe would be so much in pocket.

He blows and puffs a church festival to any desired extent, and does the poster printing at half rates, and rarely gets your thank you for it. It goes as part of his duty as an editor. He does more work gratuitously for the town and community than all the rest of the population put together and gets cursed for it all, while in many instances where a man donates a few dollars to a Fourth of July celebration, base ball club, or church, he is gratefully remembered. Oh, it is a sweet thing to be an editor! He passes "free," you know.

Coxe's Deal With the Reading.

The Philadelphia & Reading R. R. Co. has made a contract with Coxe Bros. & Co., to run for thirty years, by which the Reading secures all their anthracite tonnage, amounting to about one and a half tons a year. Coxe Bros. have agreed to build about forty-one miles of railroad, the greater part of which is now completed, and the Reading is to build ten miles to a point near Lofty on its Catawissa branch to a connection with Coxe's lines. The larger portion of this tonnage will be transported to Port Reading and Port Richmond. The first shipment under this contract will be made over the Reading lines on October 1. His contract and the contract lately made with the Pennsylvania Anthracite Coal Co., will add about 2,000,000 tons per annum to the Reading's anthracite tonnage.

ORANGE TOWNSHIP
Sunday School Convention.

The Orange township District Sunday School convention met in the Union church in Orangeville May 16, 1891 at ten o'clock a. m. and opened with prayer.

The convention was welcomed by Rev. A. Houtz in a neat and appropriate manner, and responded to by Dr. R. Hamill Davis in happy and well chosen words.

The business of the convention consisted in the reading of the minutes of the last meeting of convention, election of officers, appointing of committees, reports of delegates, report of Treasurer, and discussion of the different topics assigned.

Reports of Delegates were interesting, showing the comparative increase of membership, and in the amounts contributed. In all the Schools there seemed to be increase and improvement, in number of volumes of their libraries and all the literature of the schools. A good showing was made in the average attendance of scholars and teachers.

The committee on Resolutions was instructed to formulate the following as the sense of this convention:

Resolved. That these Sunday school conventions exert a good influence in removing denominational prejudice and in fostering christian love.

Resolved. That the Pastor is by virtue of his office, the general superintendent over all the Sunday schools in his charge. And that it is his duty to inspect them and counsel in the selection of officers, teachers and Sunday school literature and music, and to urge the claims of the Sunday school upon the parents and congregations.

Resolved. That Parents when possible should attend the Sunday school as their interests are allied with that of their children, as the tendency of scholars, especially the boys, is to drift away from the Sunday school when they grow up, and as the workers in the Sunday school need the encouragement of parents.

Resolved. That the teacher teaches for eternity. That the true end of teaching is practical christianity. And the necessary qualifications of Sunday School teachers are: He must be well versed in scripture. He must be a sincere christian. And he must have tact.

Resolved. That kind attention on the part of the teacher, the persuasive influence of the parents, and the general attractiveness of the Sunday school will contribute much to good attendance of the scholars.

Resolved. That teaching in the Sunday school is not optional work but obligatory on the teacher as a christian, as a church member, and as a moral citizen.

Resolved That the Sunday school should not support itself, but be supported by the congregation, and the contributions of the Sunday school should be purely for benevolent purposes thereof cultivating the spirit of benevolence among the children.

Resolved. That the Sunday school is not for the young exclusively but should be considered as the congregational meeting on Sabbath to study the word of God.

Resolved. That our thanks are hereby tendered to the good people of Orangeville for their kind hospitality and to the Union church for the use of the same.

WALLER.

Samuel Yorks and wife of Texas are visiting his brother John Yorks of this place, who has been sick for some time and is now failing very fast. Before coming here they visited some of their children in Michigan, from which State they were accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. Gearhart Kile.

Charles Everhart arrived from Philadelphia last week and is visiting his parents and friends at this place. He is a machinist and will go back to the city in a few days.

There will be a meeting at the Union church on Saturday evening to see about holding a festival in this place in the near future. Festivals are very nice places for amusement but as a general rule we believe they should be held, if held at all for individual gain and let those who wish to support any good cause give the money directly to the cause and in country districts at least, we think it would save a great deal of ill feelings.

The rains we had last week were very much needed and a little more would help the plowing.

Cut worms are said to be cutting off the corn and garden plants around here at a great rate.

EAST BENTON.

Miss Minnie Bittenbender of Grand Rapids, Michigan, was the guest of Hon. James McHenry's family at Cambra last Friday when she exhibited some of her elocutionary powers. Happening in town on the above day, we were called in to witness her ability, and we were delighted with the good treat. The parlor was filled with eager and amused listeners. The young lady is of an amiable and social nature, and the title of one of her recitations was "Katarina's Visit to New York". Her father was born in the Cambra hotel, and it must be a source of gratification to Miss Bittenbender to have visited the place of her father's birth.

The rains last week have resuscitated vegetation and all nature seems smiling.

Bruce Cary has remodeled, improved and otherwise beautified the Cambra hotel, and he is obliging, clever, and a congenial landlord.

The traveling public will find first class accommodations when calling upon him for enjoyment, besides he is democratic to the core and knows how to pitch quoits.

THE GIRL'S SOLDIER LIFE.

The Romantic Military Career of a Philadelphia Lady.

In January, 1862, Edward L. Pierce, of Massachusetts, was sent by Secretary Case to Port Royal, S. C., to inquire into the condition of the negroes on the Sea Island cotton plantation, and to report on the feasibility of opening schools at that place for the benefit of the inhabitants.

As the masters had abandoned these plantations and fled into the interior, Mr. Pierce returned to Port Royal with a large company of young men and a few women to begin his experiment. Of the women there were Miss Susan Walker, Mrs. Johnson and Mrs. Donelson, of Washington. Among those who offered to go were two untried volunteers who were so youthful that Mr. Pierce declined to accept their services. One of them returned to her home. The other would not be denied, and her patriotic devotion was such she finally overcame the objections of Mr. Pierce. She pleaded for the right to serve her country in this manner, promising to supplement by her strength and activity the waning physical endurance of her superiors in age. Soon all of the ladies were installed in the home at the headquarters of Mr. Pierce, on Pope's plantation, St. Helena Island. Under the same jurisdiction was also the Eustace plantation of Lady's Island.

On both plantations were 500 field hands, with their families, needing every kind of care which intelligence and humanity could bestow. They were accustomed to work only under the compulsion of slavery. It was difficult to believe in the direction of white persons. The first thing to be done was to persuade them to work for a just pecuniary reward. When they found that Massa Lincum meant freedom and gold dollars besides, goodly crops were soon in the ground and cheerful obedience was rendered.

Schools were established, the younger pupils studying by day and the older by night, and the reign of order and prosperity had begun. The old ladies were soon compelled to return north. The young men were distributed in various duties, and on the young devotee, who was Miss Nellie Winsor, of Boston, aged twenty-one, fell the sole direction of the 500 field hands. She appointed them their daily tasks every morning. She was their paymaster when their work was done, and in addition, she was their teacher, minister, nurse and physician all in one.

The duties of teaching were speedily shared by Miss Laura Towne, of Philadelphia; by Miss Ellen Murray and by several others, but the young girl who pleaded for the right to serve her country fulfilled every promise made to Mr. Pierce by the full surrender of her strength and activity. She began by determining to finish each day's duty before she closed her eyes in sleep. She soon found that her multiplied offices brought ever developing duties, and that these never could be finished. Sleep she must for the coming day and sleep she did, and thus preserved her youthful vigor.

A pressing necessity was now revealed. A picket guard was offered, but for prudential reasons Miss Winsor strongly objected. She preferred to rely on her own 500 field hands, with whom the most amicable relations had already been established. She therefore selected from them 100 able bodied men, drilled them daily in the manual of arms and established her guard, which did good service for over a year.

During this period Miss Winsor held a captain's commission and drew the pay of a captain. She was officially recognized by the United States government. Her duties as captain occupied but one hour daily, and, in fact, constituted but a small portion of her labors. It is, however, possible that these duties proved her as competent to deposit a vote as any one of those 500 men whom she directed in the labor of raising cotton or the 100 whom she drilled in the manual of arms.

When the necessity of protecting the plantation no longer existed, Miss Winsor's company entered Colonel Higginson's First South Carolina regiment with the advantage of a year's drill in military tactics.

After the close of the war Miss Winsor married and became Mrs. J. N. Cushing. She went to Burmah as a missionary, and remained in that service fourteen years.—Philadelphia Press.

Devil Dick.

Devil Dick was a sergeant in his company (D, Fourth Kentucky). The first lieutenant was a small man and not very strong. While encamped at Dalton the first lieutenant was in command, the captain being off on furlough. Dick was in extra good humor one day, and for the lack of anything better to do procured a wheelbarrow and caught the lieutenant, and by force thrust him into the barrow and wheeled him swiftly down the color line. The lieutenant was shocked and outraged to such a degree that Dick was put in the guard house and reduced to the ranks. He was languishing under guard when his captain returned two weeks later, and it was with great difficulty that he got him relieved and restored to rank.—Exchange.

Soldier, Rest!

Soldier, rest, thy warfare o'er,
Sleep the sleep that knows not breaking;
Dream of battlefields no more,
Days of danger, nights of waking.
In our isle's enchanted hall,
Hands unseen thy couch are strewing,
Fairy strains of music fall,
Every sense in slumber dewing.
Soldier, rest! thy warfare o'er,
Dream of fighting fields no more.
Sleep the sleep that knows not breaking,
Morn of toil, nor night of waking.

No rude sound shall reach thine ear,
Armor's clang, or war steed champing,
Trump nor pibroch summon here
Mustering clan or squadron tramping.
Yet the lark's shrill fife may come
At the daybreak from the fallow,
And the littern sound his drum,
Booming from the sedgy shallow.
Ruder sounds shall none be near,
Guards nor warders challenge here,
Here's no war steed's neigh and champing,
Shouting clans, or squadrons stamping.
—Scott's "Lady of the Lake."

An Old Soldier.

Among the names of those who have been decorated with the medal of honor is that of Sergeant James Fegan, who for thirty-five years was a soldier in the United States army. His record shows that he enlisted in 1851, re-enlisted several times, participated in thirty battles, and was wounded five or six times. Army regulations ordain that the funeral escort of a sergeant shall consist of sixteen privates, commanded by a sergeant, and accompanied by the non-commissioned officers of the company wearing side arms only.

When Sergeant Fegan died at Fort Shaw, Mon., the colonel ordered out the whole garrison to follow the remains of a man whose years of faithful service and brave deeds were thought worthy of extraordinary honor.

Fegan was an Irishman who loved the service, and delighted to participate in its duties and dangers. One day in 1867, when his regiment was at Fort Dodge, on the banks of the Arkansas, Fegan called at the abode of his lieutenant, accompanied by his wife and son.

He called to put $2,800 in the lieutenant's hands to keep for him. Standing erect, 6 feet 2 inches in height, he put his left hand on the boy's head, saluted with his right hand and said:

"Liftinint! the proudest feather in his father's cap it will be when he sees this lad idducated like an officer and a gintleman. An' we've got the money to do it, too—haven't we, ould woman? Dhrop a curtsy, woman! Right hand salute, James, to the liftinint!"

When the son grew up he enlisted in the father's regiment. He was promoted to be first sergeant of the company, and thus there was presented the singular spectacle of father and son serving as sergeants in the same regiment.

Fegan senior was respectful and soldierly in his demeanor to officers, who were to him of the "quality," and he exacted similar respect to himself when on duty.

One night at the guard house, he being the sergeant of the guard, was addressed by a recruit as "Jim."

Whack! and the raw recruit was sprawling.

"Jim, is it?" roared the irate sergeant. "Whin I'm on dhuty it's 'Sergeant Faygan' ye'll call me. Whin I'm off dhuty, thin, an' not till thin, I'm Jim. D'ye mind it? D'ye mind it?"—G. A. R. Gazette.

A Woman's Answer.

"Why do I belong to the Woman's Relief corps?"

"Well my father was a soldier—a strong, large man, with an iron constitution, we thought, when he went into the army. When he came home he was thin and gaunt, with lines of pain on his face and streaks of gray in his dark hair. Uncomplainingly he suffered a few years and died. An uncle, a plain, kind and generous man, left his little comfortable home among the northern pines followed soon by his son, the eldest of the family, but scarce sixteen—tall, straight as an arrow and graceful as the pine trees he had played beneath.

"The father, after lying in the hospital for months, was brought home, and, though still alive, has never seen one day free from pain, is bowed and bent, a helpless cripple from rheumatism. Yet he was paid in full for his services, and has never secured one cent of a pension, because some paper is wanting. The son died in the hospital of fever.

"Another—the dearest and best cousin of all—fresh from college, with the promise of a bright career in life, entered the ranks, was shot through the heart, and his dead body brought home and buried in the old cemetery near by.

"A playmate I had grown up with from infancy, who seemed like a brother, lost a leg, and now hobbles around on crutches.

"The man I married was a soldier too, and today suffers untold agonies of pain from exposure to wet and cold while bravely defending his country.

"These, my friends, are some of my reasons for joining the Woman's Relief corps, hoping in a quiet way with these loyal women to relieve some suffering widow or orphan, or at least to offer one word of sympathy. And I never meet an old soldier, poor, dirty and ragged though he be, without thoughts filling my mind of the suffering and privations he heroically endured while serving his country, and I feel like grasping his hand in token of the friendship and respect I feel for him."

They Dallied Too Long.

One day a detachment of General Basil Duke's troops was moving through the northern part of Kentucky. Dick Wintersmith's son was in the band and its leader. The guerrillas were worn out and hunted down. Their horses were nearly foundered. The men were dirty and ragged. They halted for rest near a seminary for young ladies, all sympathizers with the Confederacy. Out came the young ladies when they saw the gray coats. They brought out food, drink and armfuls of flowers. They hung flowers around the necks of the hunted men, and sang in a musical chorus, "Oh, you darling Confederates."

A straggling Confederate, fat, greasy and ragged, came up flogging a jaded hack along, and swearing because he could not keep up with his associates. He was just in time to hear the invocation of the young ladies, and yelled out, "Yes, you darling, sweet Confederates, the Yanks are coming!" At this there was a bolt. The laggard pounded on behind, saying, "Oh, you sweet darlings, I hope the Yanks will get you!"

The Federals were indeed right at his heels, and the flying Confederates ahead wheeled in their saddles, expecting to witness the capture of the slow rider. Suddenly the tired horse stumbled and fell and threw the fat rider over into a ditch, where he escaped notice, while a detachment of Federal troops headed off the main band and captured every one. Only the laggard escaped, and the prisoners never heard the last of "Oh, you sweet, darling Confederates."—Southern Bivouac.

OUR WOMAN HEROES.

There are heroes for danger and heroes for war,
And heroes there are without chevron or scar,
Whose monuments rise in no temple of fame,
Whose deeds neither herald nor trumpet proclaim.

The mothers who gave their brave sons to the fray,
With tears for their slumber and smiles for the day;
The wives with their babies asleep in their arms,
Their hearts throbbing fast at the battle alarms.

The girl leaning shy on her young lover's breast,
One kiss, 'tis the last ere his soul is at rest;
The widow who passed from the freshly turned sod
To comfort the wounded, or speed them to God.

No soldier e'er answered the call of the drum,
But left woman weeping until he should come;
No hero e'er died in the heat of the strife
But woman in sorrow hung over his life.

Oh, brave woman heroes, your faith and your pride
Have urged to the conquest, have cheered those who died;
Your prayers have lit the rough paths of defeat,
Their glory blazed over the lines of retreat.

Where carnage ran reddest and woman was seen,
All eyes were uplifted, as 'twere to a queen;
Now open ranks, comrades, salute her once more,
Untitled, unchevroned, but dear as of yore.

—Kate Brownlee Sherwood.

The Wheelbarrow Test.

Three or four of us on the car were talking about General Sherman's death, and, as might have been expected, one of the group modestly admitted that he was with the lamented general on his famous march to the sea. There was a woman in the seat ahead, surrounded by bundles and baskets, and evidently going somewhere on a visit. The war talk soon stirred her up, and she turned to the veteran and queried:

"Were you right in a battle?"

"Yes'm."

"Dead men all around?"

"Yes'm."

"Wounded crying for water?"

"Yes'm."

"Bombshells and cannon balls falling around you like hail?"

"Yes'm."

"And you didn't run?"

"No'm, I should hope not," he modestly replied.

"Stood right there and never got scairt, eh?"

"Yes'm."

"Well, now, I don't believe it!" she bluntly exclaimed. "It ain't human natur'. It ain't accordin' to things."

"I hope you do not doubt my word, madam."

"Yes, I do," she sharply replied. "I don't believe you have got any more nerve than my Sam has, and Sam can't stand the test."

"Then you have a test?"

"Yes, I have. You jest get off at Scottdale, where I am going to stop. There'll be a wheelbarrow somewhere around there, and you just stand off about thirty feet and let me bear down on you with it. If you don't jump or dodge or climb a telegraph pole I'll give in that you're the bravest man I ever saw!"

"I—I'm afraid I haven't time to stop off," he stammered.

"I knew you wouldn't have," she dryly replied. "They never do. They talk about bombshells and dead men and slaughter pens, and they make out that they charged up to the roaring cannon, but the minute I talk wheelbarrow they knuckle. You needn't say no more. You've wilted."

And he hadn't another word to utter. —Exchange.

An Amateur Bummer.

We were at Baltimore, near Warrenton, in November, 1862, General W. H. T. Brooks commanding the division in place of General Slocum, who had been called to lead the Twelfth corps. Brooks had lead a brigade in another division, and when we asked his soldiers what sort of a leader our new man was, they answered: "Oh, he's all right. We call him 'Bully' Brooks." A few days after he established headquarters with us one of our men came in from a foraging expedition with half a lamb, well wrapped up and slung over his shoulder. The orders about foraging were strict at the time, the penalty being confinement at Dry Tortugas breaking stone.

Our comrade was challenged by some one at headquarters, brought before the general, the plunder seized and sent to the headquarters mess, of course. The exact conversation that took place I cannot recall, but the delinquent was told in substance that he deserved a good kicking, or some other mild but humiliating punishment, for not bringing in the whole lamb, and for not sneaking into camp unobserved while cast iron orders were in vogue.

When he owned up frankly that he had blundered and was a novice in the business, the general told him to go to the cook and get a share of the lamb and repair to his quarters, never to repeat the offense. As soon as this story got around camp our boys of the First division concluded that Brooks was a "bully" fellow, and so it turned out.—George L. Kilmer in Republic Magazine.

Who the Heroes Were.

You never was scared in battle? Here,
Old comrade, don't make a break like that.
The man don't live who was free from fear
When the vicious bullets began to spat,
And the cannons belched from their iron throats
The deafening notes of the song of war—
The frightful, terrible, thundering notes
That caused the eternal earth to jar!

I've heard men say they were just as cool
In the heat of battle as they would be
In a quiet seat in a Sabbath school,
But they couldn't find a believer in me.
I never flinched, never shirked a call,
But several times in the war swept south.
If I'd been shot through the heart the ball
Would have had to hit me square in the mouth.

In the silliest sort of talk we hear—
And hear from soldiers of solid worth—
That they stood in the front and felt no fear
When the rumblings of battle convulsed the earth.
I hold that our bravest men were those
Who felt alarm at the cannon's roar,
Yet never rearward pointed their toes,
But stood like men till the battle was o'er.

—Captain Jack Crawford, the Poet Scout.

A RIDE ON A MULE.

There were two men in Company A, Seventeenth regiment, Connecticut volunteers, that were very intimate chums. They were Jim Hurlbut and Ed Maloney. Their intimacy resulted from a fight that they had had while the regiment was stationed in Baltimore in September, 1862. The captain, after separating them, ordered them to load their knapsacks with bricks, and turned them over to the officer of the guard, with orders for them to march the guard line four hours as a punishment. They were ever afterwards the firmest of friends.

Shortly after Maloney's release from arrest, on account of his "raid on the commissary" at Brooks' Station, 1863, he was detailed as a teamster on the ammunition train of the Eleventh corps. The train was parked at Stafford Court House, some two miles from our camp. Ed got lonesome sometimes, and, obtaining permission, would ride his "wheel" mule to our camp to visit the boys of Company A, and especially his old chum Hurlbut. One day Jim was on the sick list, and was lying in his bunk in a half dressed condition, only his shirt and drawers on. It was about 2:30 p. m., and the battalion was forming on the parade ground for drill, when Ed rode up to his tent on his mule, calling for Jim. He got up and asked Maloney to give him a ride on his mule. "He'll throw you in a minute; he knows when a stranger mounts him," was Ed's reply. "I'll risk that," says Jim. "I won't go any further than the end of our company street and back."

So Ed dismounted and Jim got in the saddle. All went well enough until the mule got to the intersection of the company with the battalion street, and finding that he had a stranger on his back, he took the bit in his mouth, and, turning his head toward the parade ground and home, he struck a full gallop in that direction. Jim got scared and lost his footing in the stirrups, which flapped against the sides of the mule, making him more unmanageable, and they came tearing down the battalion street at a fearful rate. Presently we heard a shout of "whoa, whoa," and, looking around, saw Jim and the mule coming like mad, and Jim holding on to the bridle for dear life, his hair standing on end, his eyes like two peeled onions, and looking scared out of his wits.

On came the mule. There was just room enough at the right of the line for him to pass without running into the woods, and among the stumps, but he shot through like an express train and on toward the camp of the train. He had not gone far when he gave a snort and elevated his heels, laid back his ears and sent Jim flying over his head alongside a big stump, while the mule went on to the train camp. Hurlbut picked himself up and struck a bee line for his tent, but he had to pass in full view of the whole regiment on his way, and he got a good salute as he ran. Maloney had to walk back to the train, and as the company marched up the street on its return from drill the captain struck his head in Jim's tent and said to him, "Say, Jim, the next time you are sick take a ride on a mule!" —W. W. Paynton in Grand Army Journal.

Tactics Extraordinary.

Immediately after the ordinance of secession had been passed, and it became apparent that there would be a war, the attention of the southern youth was directed almost exclusively to "Hardee's Tactics," and especially to the drill of the company. Military organizations sprang up as thick as hops all over the country, and the rivalry between them, as well as the interest elicited from their civilian friends and admirers, was immense. There was one very fine company organized at Memphis, which acquired a wide reputation for excellence in all the evolutions. It was commanded by a Mexican veteran, who was master of tactics and a martinet in drill.

Every afternoon a throng of people would resort to the large vacant lot whereon this company was receiving instruction, to witness and applaud. Once, when an unusually large crowd was collected, the captain became so enthused that after exhausting every recognized movement he began to extemporize, and shouted out the command, "Company, right and left oblique, march!" The men essayed to obey the order, and scattered widely. The captain racked his brain for a proper command to bring them together again, but the tactics provided no formula for such a dilemma. At length, when the boys had become strung out like a flock of wild pigeons, and seemed about to separate forever, he yelled in desperation, "Huddle! gol darn ye!"—Southern Bivouac.

In the Same Old Way.

Charles Gates, a minor son, wished to enlist, but his aged parents objected to it. One morning he was sent to drive the cows to pasture on his way to work, taking his dinner with him. But at night he did not come back, because he had run away and enlisted. He remained through the three years without a furlough, and returned with the regiment, unharmed by rebel bullets. He arrived in the old pasture at home one night just at "cowtime," and leisurely drove up the same old cows as if he hadn't been away for three years. His "reception" was a joyful one, none the less so because his coming was a complete surprise. —Exchange.

Blue and Gray in Richmond.

While in Richmond I witnessed a funeral of a prominent citizen who had been an active member in several societies. My attention being attracted by the music I followed. I always follow a band, just as I did when a boy, and on coming up to the procession I observed, with feelings that I may not describe, but which I should like some of our northern G. A. R. men to have witnessed, that the guard of honor on each side of the hearse was composed of the blue and the gray. On one side walked men in blue uniforms of the G. A. R. and on the other the gray of the Confederate veterans.—War Path.

Save money and Suffering.

One feature of the thousands of testimonials that have been given in behalf of S. S. S. is remarkable. In numbers of instances it is related that a great deal of time and money have been spent in vain effort to secure relief from disease in the usual way. A knowledge of the virtues of Swift's Specific would have saved the time and the money, to say nothing of the prevention of the suffering. The great blood purifier is for sale by druggists everywhere, and the S. S. S. company in Atlanta will send to any address their Treatise on Blood and Skin Diseases free, and a pamphlet containing a few of the thousands of testimonials they have received from those who have experienced the benefits of this wonderful medicine.

MEMORIAL DAY.

MAY 30.

Comrades, bow with uncovered head,
And deem it not weakness to shed
Tears o'er his grave.
Strew flowers with memory's hand,
Float o'er him the flag of our land
He died to save.

The red for the blood he shed,
The white for his soul so pure,
The blue for the sky o'erhead,
Where his name shall aye endure.

He was only a stripling young,
But ne'er hath the poet sung
Of one so brave.
In the carnage of shot and shell,
With the broken staff, he fell,
And found a grave.

Oh, then, scatter the roses red,
Red, red as the blood he shed,
And lilies white:
Weave in the forget-me-not's hue,
A garland—red, white and blue—
Our emblem bright.

The red for the blood he shed,
The white for his soul so pure,
The blue for the sky o'erhead,
Where his name shall aye endure.

—Grace Le Baron.

THE TWO COLOR BEARERS

Philip Larrabee came of good stock. He was descended on his father's side from one of those hardy seamen who first sailed under the now historic flag of our country. In the memorable naval fight off Portland between the Yankee craft Enterprise and the British brig Boxer, Philip's ancestor bore a gallant and conspicuous part. It was into his arms the youthful Commander Burroughs fell, refusing to be carried below; he, who when the sword of the vanquished enemy was presented to him, clasped his hands and exclaimed: "I am satisfied. I die contented."

On the other side of the family tree the fires of patriotism burnt equally as bright.

Time and time again had Philip, when a lad, begged his father to tell him the story of that memorable fight on the village green at Lexington, where his grandfather sealed with his life's blood his devotion to a just and noble cause.

The life of Philip Larrabee, like that of his father, seemed destined to be an eventful one, but one of those fatal epidemics which periodically sweep through a community left Philip and his sister Martha, some three years his senior, alone to struggle against a cold and unsympathetic world.

Philip and his sister had a widowed aunt who lived on the outskirts of one of those villages that so picturesquely sit on the rugged coast of the old Bay State, overlooking the blue waters that continually kiss its shore. In the humble abode of this good woman, who in every way tried to heal their griefs and fit them for the stern realities of life, the two orphan children found a home and a loving heart. Having a natural taste for the water, Philip soon became expert in the sailing of little craft.

Martha, under his tuition, in time could handle a boat almost as well, and often she would, while Philip was away, be seen at the helm managing it with the ease and grace of her brother.

Philip's eighteenth birthday had come and gone, and he had now developed into a sturdy, well formed young man. One evening he came home from the village quite late—an occurrence unusual for him, for he rarely missed sitting down to the evening meal with his aunt and sister.

"I wonder where Phil can be?" said Martha. "Here it is after 7 o'clock and no sign of him yet."

But in this she was mistaken, for glancing out of the window she saw Philip rapidly coming up the road, open the gate, and running up the neat gravel walk leading to the house, burst into the room before her aunt had replied to her question.

"Why, Phil! What is the matter? Has anything dreadful happened at the village?" exclaimed Martha.

"Yes—yes, everything has happened! Fort Sumter has been fired upon—the president has called for troops, and—I have enlisted!"

As Philip said this he clasped Martha in his strong arms, and before she could recover from her amazement at the startling news, he pressed a warm and loving kiss upon her lips and continued:

"Don't discourage me from going, Martha—please don't! I feel as though father and mother would rise up in their graves and point their fingers at me in scorn if I refused to respond to our country's appeal. I would disgrace the blood that flows through our veins if I now failed to do my duty."

Philip looked down into his sister's face. A bright smile greeted his glance, and as she tried to keep back the tears she said:

"Phil, if you had done otherwise I believe I should have hated you as much as I now love you!"

The next twelve months were most eventful ones in the life of Philip Larrabee. With feelings of pride and joy, but mingled with fear and anguish, Martha followed, through the accounts in the papers and letters from Philip, the movements and deeds of his regiment—especially so when after one of those desperate engagements that occurred in the earlier period of the war she read of Philip's promotion to sergeant and color bearer. He had seized the regimental flag from the hands of him who relinquished it only in death, and had bravely carried it through the rest of that sanguinary day till victory at last perched upon its tattered folds.

Philip's regiment, thinned by death and disease to less than one-half of its original number, now enjoyed a brief season of rest.

In comfortable quarters, consisting of log huts built from the neighboring forest, they peacefully and quietly passed the winter months in the beautiful valley of the Shenandoah. Spring drew near, and as it approached active preparations for the coming campaign were begun. During the commencement of these preparations Philip one day received orders to report to the colonel of his regiment.

He found the colonel standing in front of the rough fireplace in his little quarters, apparently in deep thought and awaiting his coming. "Philip," said he, turning and gazing steadily into his eye as though he would read his inmost thoughts, "the general has requested of me a man, one that I know to be brave, discreet and to be depended upon under the most trying circumstances. He desires him for a service which will not only require nerve and courage, but will at times place him in positions of the most desperate and dangerous character. I know no one in the regiment whom I could so trustingly rely upon as yourself. Do you care to volunteer?"

Without a moment's hesitancy Philip calmly replied, "Colonel, I am ready at all times to serve my country in any capacity duty requires."

As the colonel proceeded to unfold to him the mission the general wished to send him upon, and the manner in which he was to leave, a deathly pallor for a moment overspread Philip's face.

The colonel stopped. "Do you hesitate?" said he. "This is to be voluntary on your part; you are not obliged to go if you do not wish to do so."

"No—no," Philip replied, "I wish to go—it is my desire to do so, but I was thinking for a moment of Martha, my sister, and of the pain she would suffer when she hears of my being missing. I am ready, colonel. I will try and do my duty, but if anything should happen to me see that no stain is allowed to rest on my name."

It was late when Philip left the colonel's quarters. As he did so the old veteran grasped him warmly by the hand, and while a tear trickled down his bronzed cheek said: "God bless and protect you, Philip. I hope to be the first to welcome you back."

The next morning Philip Larrabee, for the first time since his enrollment as a soldier, failed to answer his name at the roll call. Doubt, uncertainty and innuendoes are as great a load for a loving heart to carry as the deepest sorrow. Martha, alarmed at first in not hearing from Philip as usual, felt her heart sink within her when she learned that he was reported as missing. Everything relating to his strange disappearance was of the most vague and unsatisfactory character. He was missing from his company, that was all that was known. Whether he had deserted, whether he was alive or dead, no one seemed able to tell. But Martha believed him to be alive, although she could not fathom the mystery. She moved about as in a trance, and seemed oblivious to all her surroundings.

Soon after this the little boat, once the constant companion of these two loving hearts, was found in a battered condition on the rocky shore of the bay some distance from the village. Its mistress was not to be found. The villagers said she had at last given away to her grief and sought consolation and rest in the deep waters that knew her so well.

* * * * * *

The army had now moved forward and was in close proximity to the enemy. Among those who stole into the Union lines after this advance was a person apparently a farmer. He proceeded at once to the headquarters of Philip's regiment, and the colonel, so the sentinel on duty there afterward declared, threw his arms around his neck and hugged him with joy. They were soon in the presence of the general, and although it is not known what happened at the interview it was evidently of an important nature.

The next day Philip Larrabee reported to the captain of his company for duty and once more took charge of the colors.

The thunder of battle once more resounded through the peaceful hills and valleys of the Shenandoah. The brigade, of which Philip's regiment formed a part, laid on its arms under cover of some woods opposite one of the enemy's strongest intrenchments. From these works the Confederate batteries kept up a most active and deadly fire. These guns must be silenced, and to do so the brigade is ordered to take them at the point of the bayonet. At the command the troops move out from under the cover and take position in full view of the enemy. The lines are formed, orders given, and the command moves forward under a terrible fire as steadily as if on parade.

A large opening consisting in part of meadow, and then the rough ground of an old potato patch has to be passed before the hills are reached on which the enemy is so securely intrenched. As the brigade moves through the meadow they get orders to "double quick," and with cheer upon cheer they steadily push forward under a murderous fire. When the edge of the potato patch is reached Philip, still carrying the colors, stops, staggers in his tracks and falls forward. The line hesitates, wavers, as though unable to proceed farther. As Philip sinks to the ground, death stamping its seal upon his noble face, a comrade catches with one hand the staff, now stained with the warm life blood of its faithful guardian; then, bending over his almost lifeless form, exclaims in tones of indescribable anguish and tenderness:

"Phil! my dearest Phil!"

What voice is that? At its tender and appealing tone the dying man looked into the face of his comrade—a look of happiness—a recognition in which soul speaks to soul, a light of unutterable joy for a second steals over the shadow of death, and in a dying whisper murmurs "Martha!"

The pause is but momentary—frightful gaps close up and the lines move forward with renewed precision and determination. The colors again proudly float through the smoke of battle. With eyes fastened upon its torn and blood-stained folds, now being borne toward the enemy far in advance, the men clear the potato patch and charge with redoubled efforts up the hill from which their ranks meet death and desolation. The color bearer is first on the heights, but the next instant the deadly minnie ball seeks another victim, and Martha, the heroine, the noble successor of her brother, falls lifeless inside the enemy's works. Her spirit takes its flight with that of Philip's, and both will awake to the reveille in another world.—G. A. R. Gazette.

No Medium Like the Newspaper.

The advertising man of a well known New York clothing house says: "We were the first to use the sails of vessels as an advertising medium. Then we got up the 'alphabet puzzle,' and gave away 500,000 puzzles while the craze lasted. Afterward we invented the Waterbury watch idea. We had to do something, because three of our principal competitors had failed, and their stocks were being sold for next to nothing by assignees; so we decided to give a Waterbury watch with every twelve dollars' worth of goods purchased. We advertised the watches 'wound and set.' To wind them fast enough we had to rig up a little machine worked like a sewing machine that would do the winding, and we kept several boys at work winding and setting them. Before we quit we had given away 40,000 of the watches.

"But nothing ever pays us like the ordinary newspaper advertising. The fact is there has come to be in this city a class of advertisement readers just as there is of news readers. They read the advertisements every day, and of course the man who wants to attract them has to get up an advertisement that will do it. The day of standing advertisements in the paper, 'Go to So-and-So's for clothing,' or 'Go to This-and-That's for shoes,' has passed, just as the day for painting signs on rocks and fences or on the sails of boats has passed. You must have something interesting and fresh in every advertisement, and it will be read.

A Place for Talent.

In nearly all regulated lines of industry at present the advertising man is one of the most important adjuncts of a business. And on the the other hand the advertising department of a first class newspaper is not what it used to be, but is instead fast becoming an interesting feature of all enterprising journals. Formerly the prevailing idea among the uninitiated was that the talented, the best, most versatile and most ingenious writers and artists were all employed in the news department. How nearly correct this idea may have been need not be stated, but that such is not the case now may be seen by a perusal of the "ads" of any flourishing paper. The competitions between the merchants and between the papers' agents have become so great that the great wholesale and retail houses of the large cities employ talented men at big salaries to attend to their advertising alone, and the men who want the best positions in the counting rooms of newspapers must combine fine business qualifications with the talent that wins success in the editorial chair.—Yenowine's News.

Advertising Necessary to Success.

The merchant or manufacturer who does not advertise his goods cannot succeed. Of late newspaper advertising has become a distinct trade in itself, and all over the country leading concerns pay fabulous prices for men who are skillful in writing catchy advertisements. In many large cities there are men earning from $3,000 to $10,000 a year to write advertisements. This fact in itself shows advertising pays.

If people interested in this subject will investigate it for themselves they will find that the leading advertisers in The Plain Dealer are the merchants who have the best stores, the best assortments of goods and who sell at the most reasonable prices. Such merchants do a much larger business than merchants who do not advertise; consequently they turn their goods over more quickly and can afford to give better prices. Close buyers appreciate this. What is the moral? He who advertises the most judiciously succeeds the best, and the buyers who seek the best bargains patronize such merchants.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Never Be Commonplace.

"Bring your feet with you and have them fitted to a pair of our common sense shoes," is the way a Pittsburg dealer advertises. It is a good phrase and one which attracts attention. The man who succeeds in advertising in such a way that people read his advertisement is the one who draws trade to his store as sure as a magnet draws a needle to itself. Study up quaint, pithy or witty phrases to head your advertisements, and be not too modest in the space they occupy.—Brockton Shoe.

Regular Publications Best.

No one takes up a regular publication without the expectation of finding something of interest. The simple act of turning the pages is as positive an example of expectation as is the opening of a closet if one is in search of a coat. Hence an announcement in a regular publication has an advantage over any other form of business solicitation—that of meeting the sought for eye at a time that it is in a mood for such greeting.—A. C. Ladd.

Fulfill Every Promise.

The merchant who desires the confidence and custom of intelligent people should never make a promise that he does not fulfill, or hold out, either by express statement or inference, any inducements that are not fully substantiated by the facts. There is no enduring success where confidence is lacking on the part of customers. Any success not founded on square and liberal dealing is sure to be short lived.

Use Common Sense.

That people should use the same practical common sense in advertising that is necessary to transact any other business would seem to be an indisputable proposition. Yet there are gentlemen who are extremely good business men in all other respects who will make grievous errors in this direction.—Knoxville Sentinel.

Must Have Genius.

The simplest advertisements sometimes require the most care and thought in their construction. To write a column is a matter of time, but to edit it down into a sentence is something more.—Printer's Ink.
